Social Procurement: The Business Case

Social Procurement Australasia are excited to announce their new resource to help you make the case for social procurement.

Social Procurement: The Business Case is a 12 page booklet which demonstrates why governments should use procurement as an effective and efficient means of achieving social and economic objectives and maximise local or regional community benefits.

The Business Case, provides accessible case studies from Australia and internationally to show how government can:

- secure targeted employment and workforce participation outcomes
- address disadvantage or economic decline in a particular region or area

The Business Case captures and communicates the value created by social procurement, recognising social procurement as a critical tool in addressing social and economic issues.

We encourage you to utilise Social Procurement: The Business Case with colleagues and key decision makers to grow social impact in Australia.
